

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A radio network transmits network information to a radio terminal when the position of the radio terminal is registered. If the network information has changed
5 when the radio terminal places an outgoing call or receives an incoming call, the radio network transmits network information after the change. The network information includes information identifying a network used to make a connection to another network, and 10 information relating to communication charges. The radio terminal calculates communication charges using the network information.